"The South 40" by JAMES A. SMITH EXTENSION AGENT

The most important turf-grass insect in Appomattox County is the sod webworm. Losses from this insect runs into the thousands of dollars annually. It appears that this insect is on the increase or at least we are doing a better job of identification.

Timeliness is important in applying insecticides if control is to be really effective. The adults are attracted to lights in the evening. Note on a calendar when they are first seen, then watch for peak activity. There will be one or more nights when the moths are very numerous. Count 10 days after this peak - then begin spraying. Ten days allow the adults to mate, lay eggs, for the eggs to hatch and the larvae to begin feeding.

Use a spray - granules and dust are not as effective. My first choice of an insecticide is Dursban, second choice Diazinon and third choice Sevin. Use a course spray. Apply 10 to 20 gallons of water per 1,000 square feet. For Dursban use 30 gallons water per 1,000 square feet.

The sod webworm has 2 to 3 generations per year, therefore, it may be advisable to make two treatments.

If you are not sure whether or not you have sod webworms, mix ¼ cup of household detergent in one gallon of water and pour over one square yard of lawn. After a few minutes the webworms will come to the surface where they can be seen. If you have a good flashlight try this at night since the larvae is a night feeder and it will be much easier to check.

Another way of identifying the insect is to look for small tan or grayish white adult moths flying up in front when walking on or mowing the lawn.

There are many examples of entire lawns being lost in this county.

A lot of corn remains to be planted. Some may even have to be replanted.

Don't forget that some of the better grain sorghum will yield 100+ bushels per acre. Harvest as silage when the seedhead is in the soft-dough stage.

Tests at Middleburg indicate 35% dry matter silage yields of 18 tons per acre are possible.

Dual wheels offer some advantages for tractors on loose soils. Tests show they are better than single wheels in loose soils. Increased ground contact area by duals will reduce soil compaction and, with liquid ballast, will provide maximum drawbar pull under adverse conditions.

Drawbar pull varies with the surface the wheel is on. For each 100 pounds weight added to drive wheels, the average pull will increase by 66 pounds on paved surfaces, 50 lbs in sandy loam soil and 36 lbs. in dry sand or green alfalfa.
